PREFACE

In the entire field of American bibliography there is, perhaps, at the present time, no single subject of more interest to so great a number of people in the United States as genealogy. This is demonstrated by the numerous lists of manuscripts and printed books upon the subject. In itself this fact is not remarkable, except for the further fact that genealogy has taken its place in American bibliography, within the present generation.

From the first English settlement in America, at Jamestown, in 1607, and that of the Pilgrims, at Plymouth, in 1620, excepting in family Bible records and a few manuscripts, genealogical history was a blank, so far as printed records are concerned, until 1771. In that year, what is believed to have been the first American family genealogy was printed at Hartford, Conn. Its title page reads: "Genealogy of the Family of Mr. Samuel Stebbins, and His Wife, From the Year 1707 to the Year 1771." In 1829, Farmer's "A Genealogical Register of the First Settlers of New England," the first collected work in genealogy in America, was published. In 1844, James Savage, LL.D. (1784-1873), eminent as a historian and antiquarian, and president of the Massachusetts Historical Society, perceiving the great value of Farmer's register to future generations, undertook the compilation of "The Genealogical Dictionary of the First Settlers of New England," and published it in four volumes, 1860-1864. This work of Savage's is still regarded as the authority on early New England genealogy and is the distinguishing mark of the first epoch in American genealogy. Savage may be said to have been the father of American genealogy.

Subsequent to the American Revolution, the War of 1812, and the Mexican War, the first three patriotic societies were formed: The Society of the Cincinnati, in 1783; the Society of the War of 1812, in 1814, and the Aztec Club of 1847, in 1847. These organizations kept aflame the patriotic spirit which is the soul of American genealogy.

To the small group of patriotic citizens of Boston that organized, in 1844, the New England Historic Genealogical Society, belongs the honor of launching the first movement for preserving in systematic form the genealogical and historical records of the nation, and also for the preservation of its revered landmarks. The New York Genealogical and Biographical Society was organized in 1869, and these two societies have since been foremost in genealogical research and in the preservation of historical landmarks.

A new era in genealogy began in 1875, with the formation at San Francisco, California, of the Sons of Revolutionary Sires—the first of the modern patriotic societies in America—inaugurated July 4, 1876. Coming one hundred years after the great struggle for independence, and membership in it requiring proof of descent from a Revolutionary soldier, a remarkable awakening to the importance of genealogy was manifested, which has since spread with ever-increasing force until to-day it is a subject of general interest. The period in which this awakening took place may be said to have marked another epoch—the second epoch—in the history of American genealogy.

The flame of patriotic fervor being kindled anew, other societies sprang into existence. The General Society of the Sons of the Revolution, instituted in 1876 and incorporated in 1883, was followed by the Society of the Sons of the American Revolution, in 1889. The women, not to be outdone in the promotion of patriotic spirit, organized the Daughters of the American Revolution and the Society of Colonial Dames of America, both launched in 1890; these were followed by the Society of Colonial Wars, in 1893; the Order of the Founders and Patriots of America, in 1896; the Society of Mayflower Descendants, in 1897; and in the years following a number of other patriotic and hereditary societies were organized, all of which have contributed in a large measure to the preservation of historical and genealogical records. A list of these societies, with a statement of their objects and the qualifications for membership in each, will be found in a separate section of this volume (pages 999-1007).

About the beginning of the second genealogical epoch, private research resulted in a marked increase in the number of individual family genealogies published annually. From 1771, when the Stebbins family genealogy was issued, until 1900, a period of 129 years, there were only about 2,500 printed genealogies. As there are now (1925) approximately 6,000 listed volumes on the subject, it will be seen that during the past quarter of a century more than 3,500 volumes were produced, the books appearing at the average rate of 140 volumes per year. If this rate of production were continued, a record of most, if not all, of the old American families would, in course of time, be assured.

All works of reference owe their chief value to accessibility for reference purposes. Unless they have a wide circulation, and especially unless they are found in public libraries, their usefulness is greatly curtailed. The circulation of family genealogies is generally limited to the kindred of a single family, and comparatively few copies reach public libraries. This is necessarily so because of the small number of copies of each genealogy that is printed. Only a few libraries in the country make any attempt to maintain a genealogical department, because it is a highly specialized branch, and therefore, genealogical works are accessible to the public only at the large library centers.

One of the principal objects of this work is to compress the lineages contained in the thousands of individual family genealogies into a single volume, in order that every public library in the country may possess the very essence of American genealogy.

This book is a genealogical library in itself. It marks the third epoch in the history of American genealogy.

Though only a few years ago genealogy was regarded by many as a "fad," and its study deprecated as an egregious display of vanity, it is to-day placed upon the dignified plane of an exact science by those who appreciate the importance of the subject.

As genealogy is the record of successive generations that created the events of history, knowledge of its relation to history naturally belongs to the educational equipment of every American citizen; and the hope is not unfounded that it will become a part of the curricula of the universities and colleges in conjunction with the study of history.

Biography alone does not account for personal traits and characteristics, but with a knowledge of both biography and ancestry of a particular individual, the student may be able to explain the source of the traits of the son of an ordinary sire or the derelictions of the son of an illustrious sire.

Filled, as it is, with dependable ancestral lore, this book offers a rich and largely unexplored field for the study of the subject of heredity in all of its phases—a field unequaled by any other single volume in existence.

If the compilation of The Abridged Compendium of American Genealogy could have been begun two hundred, or even one hundred, years ago, the task would have been comparatively a simple one. In 1790, the population of the United States was 3,929,214, and, at the ratio prevailing at that time of about six persons to a family, there were about 654,869 families in the country, practically every one of which was of Colonial or Revolutionary ancestry, and therefore potentially "first families." In 1920, the continental population was 105,710,620, and, at the present ratio of 4.3 persons to a family, there are about 24,583,860 families in the United States. The enormous increase in population between the years mentioned serves to illustrate that the longer the delay in the compilation of a national genealogy the greater the difficulties to be surmounted.

It remained, however, for the catastrophe of the greatest war in history to impress upon many thinking people the need for an authoritative work containing the lineages of contemporary Americans; and it is a simple statement of fact to say that this work was born of patriotic spirit to meet a national necessity, and that national service is the ideal upon which it is founded.

While not all families are represented in the volume that are entitled to inclusion in the list of "first families," practically every name distinguished in the early history of the country will be found within its pages.

With the inclusion of approximately 5,000 records and more than 7,000 lineages, it is believed that this volume is an excellent nucleus for a genealogical history worthy of the country.

One of the pleasing results of the widespread correspondence required in the preparation of the work, was the hearty and generous recognition of its importance and the lively interest which was created, eliciting a flood of inquiries at the libraries and a new and unexpected demand for genealogical books all over the country. Thousands of persons became interested in genealogical research, and it is hoped that with the continuance of the co-operation thus far accorded the undertaking, this work may be extended, volume by volume, until the records of all worthy descendants of Colonial and Revolutionary ancestry are included in The Abridged Compendium of American Genealogy.

ACKNOWLEDGMENTS

Sincere thanks are due to persons who have kindly loaned books and manuscripts which have assisted greatly in the production of this work, and also to many who have offered suggestions that materially aided in the solution of knotty problems. Especially are thanks due to officers of the patriotic societies. Their hearty co-operation, based upon personal experience, has been a constant source of encouragement, so that it may truly be said that courtesies received from them have contributed in a larger degree toward the completion of this volume than any other extraneous source that could be named.

EXPLANATION AND ANALYSIS OF RECORDS

While every person acquainted with genealogy will readily understand the records as they appear in this volume, an explanation is here given for the information of those not familiar with genealogical usages and terms.

As no standardized system for recording American genealogies was in existence at the time this work was projected, there was no pattern on which to fashion the records. English methods, designed mainly for descent from royalty, nobility or gentry, could not be applied to American usages; therefore it was necessary to originate and develop a system to conform to American standards of the worth of ancestry. It is believed that the system adopted for The Abridged Compendium of American Genealogy will meet with general approval for its simplicity of style and clarity of presentation.

In numbering the generations in America it was found necessary to represent the subject of the record as number one (although not actually numbered in the record), and his parents as number two, since under this system the lineages of both father and mother, seldom of equal number of generations, always conjoin in their common number (2). Thus, the subject is represented as number one (although not actually numbered in the record); his parents are always numbered 2; his grandparents in both lines of descent are always numbered 3; his great grandparents in both lines of descent are always numbered 4; and so on, to the earliest known ancestor in America, who is given the highest number, which shows the number of generations in America in each line of descent.

Confusion was also avoided under this method of numbering by eliminating the designation "10th from," or "5th from," as the case may be; the numbers, as given in the records, show clearly the number of generations in America and that the subject is a descendant OF the ancestors named; of course, he is also descended FROM the ancestors, but in a generation one number lower than that given the ancestors in the record.

The double dates which will be found throughout the work in the earlier generations in the records are made necessary by the change from the Old Style to the New Style of reckoning of the beginning of the year. In 1563, France adopted January 1st as the beginning of the year. Scotland adopted January 1st in 1600, but it was not until 1752 that England adopted the same date. Before 1752 (when the year began March 25th), in the records of the colonies that followed the English custom, dates between January 1st and March 24th, inclusive, were often indicated by two consecutive years (1700/01), to be interpreted at the option of the reader, as conforming to the New, or to the Old Style. For example: February 22, 1700/01, meant February 22, 1700, if the year was considered in the Old Style, ending March 24; if considered in the New Style, ending December 31, it would be 1701. The last year of a double date corresponds to our present system of reckoning.

Hyphenated double dates, as 1700-01, indicate that the event to which these years refer is not definitely known, but that it did occur during either of the years. When a period of years is hyphenated, as 1700-05, it indicates that the event referred to occurred between those years.

Records are divided into paragraphs, as follows: Name of the subject with place and date of birth; paternal lineage from the earliest known ancestor in America down to the grandparents (numbered 3); maternal lineage similar to the paternal; parents of the subject (numbered 2), with their issue numbered consecutively in the order of birth, and to whom married; data of marriage of the subject, the issue of this marriage, also numbered consecutively in the order of birth, with data of education, military service and marriage; biography of the subject, ending with his present residence address.

It will be noted that the surname of the earliest ancestor, in each line, appears in Bold Face type; this is to emphasize that the following generations, whose Christian names only are given, are all of the same surname as the name in the Bold Face type unless the surname is changed by the marriage of a daughter, in which case her husband's name appears also in Bold Face type to emphasize the change in surname. In some records it will be noted that the surname changes frequently and every change is emphasized by Bold Face type. This style of emphasis has also been carried out in the surname of the father of the subject to emphasize the fact that his children, whose Christian names only are given, bear the same surname.

The ideal upon which this work was founded is national service, and the publishers and editors have held this ideal clearly in mind throughout the period of preparation and publication. So dedicated, the editors welcome suggestions for improvement in style and treatment of subject matter, as well as criticism tending to increase the usefulness of the book, not only for the benefit of the present generations, but also for posterity. Suggestions of names and data pertaining to them will be thankfully received and accorded every consideration for inclusion in Volume Two of this work. However, the editors reserve the right to accept or reject any data at their discretion. No record in this volume has been included with any other view than to increase the usefulness of the book; no space has been paid for, nor can it be.
